

What's the Value
of My Personal Injury Case?

11 Questions the insurance companies will ask in order to determine a value to your Personal Injury claim.

1. The insurance company is going to want to know what type of injury do you have and what are the nature of your injuries?
2. What body parts have been injured in that accident that you were involved in?
3. So they're asking questions and they're looking for answers to do you have a broken bone or are the injuries soft tissue related?
4. Do you have a more catastrophic injury that caused brain damage such as a closed head injury or some other serious injury?
5. Did the accident lead to any type of paralysis that would render you unable to walk or to care for yourself for the rest of your life?
6. How permanent are your injuries or are your injuries something that physical therapy will get you over the hump in say six to eight months?
7. Will you be back to almost new again with no long term effects from the injury?
8. Or are your injuries permanent in nature such that you are never really going to get back to your old self?
9. They also want to know whether your injuries are going to lead to any type of surgical procedures and what was the outcome or outcomes of that surgical procedure?
10. Did the surgery restore you back to almost new condition again or are you still left to contend with some residual effects from that surgical procedure?
11. Are there any scarring involved that will be permanent that could potentially affect you for the rest of your life?
